

12/11/18 - LOS ANGELES, CA
Palladium Night #3

First of my 3 nights happening at the famous Palladium! The last time I was here was during the 2009 wave goodbye shows and it feels good to be back. I got to the venue early and managed to sneak my gear in with no problems. After making my way past security I made my way to the floor to secure a spot in front ~~of~~ of the mixing desk. Holy hell are the floors at this venue sticky! I almost lost a shoe when Nails took the stage and the crowd started to move forward. Hearing "Now Im Nothing" again for the first time in nearly a decade was a nice surprise as was hearing SIN again. I don't know about any other shows, but tonight's show had some cool extras thrown in like lasers and speakers at the rear of the venue that faced the stage. These speakers ~~are~~ would play bits of synths during certain songs along with some of Robin's guitar. It made the show seem really immersive and was like no other show I have been to. Trent really meant it when he said these shows were going to be different and special. Another highlight for me tonight was hearing "Physiel" again. I honestly can't remember when I last heard this track live but I do know it's been over 10 years much like "Now Im Nothing". Lastly, hearing the opening tones to "A Warm Place" was also awesome. Being that this song has only been played live 3 times, one of which was at the Palladium back in 2009, I was pretty pumped. Tonight's show was number 52 for me since 2000. I can't wait to see what else the band has in store for us!